

English

- The student learned about storytelling and creative writing through the process of creating a starter story from a picture.
- They practiced visual interpretation and descriptive language by analyzing the image and translating it into a narrative.
- The activity encouraged the student to use their imagination and develop their storytelling skills through character development and plot progression.

Physical Education

- The activity may have inspired the student to incorporate the image or elements from the story into a physical activity, such as creating a game related to the story or taking a nature walk to find similar scenes as in the picture.
- The student may have also developed their creativity and problem-solving skills through physical tasks related to the story, such as enacting scenes or creating obstacle courses based on the story's setting or events.
- Engaging in this storytelling activity could have promoted teamwork and social interaction if done in a group setting, contributing to the student's physical and social development.

Continued development related to this activity could involve exploring different genres of writing or incorporating elements from the physical activity into the storytelling process. Encouraging the child to create their own illustrations for their stories or engage in drama activities could further enhance their creativity and storytelling skills.
