

Core Skills Analysis

Practical life

- Through folding towels, the 6-year-old student has developed fine motor skills by practicing precise hand movements.
- The activity promotes independence as the child learns to complete a practical task on their own.
- It encourages the development of organizational skills as the child learns to fold and stack towels systematically.
- The student learns the importance of care and respect for their environment as they neatly fold the towels.

Tips

For continued development related to folding towels, encourage the 6-year-old student to try folding different types of fabric such as handkerchiefs or washcloths. You can also introduce challenges like timing how fast they can fold a set of towels or teaching them to create towel animals for added fun and creativity.
