Tips

For continued development after creating the travel brochure for Korea, students can further enhance their English skills by writing a detailed travel journal about a virtual trip to their dream destination, incorporating even more descriptive language and personal reflections. Additionally, they can explore different cultures through novel reading to expand their knowledge and inspire new travel destinations for future brochures. To practice their research skills, students can take on mini-projects like planning a day itinerary for a city they would like to visit, researching attractions and local experiences to include in their itinerary. Lastly, for creative development, students can engage in storytelling exercises where they create fictional travel brochures for imaginary lands, allowing them to unleash their creativity and explore limitless possibilities.
