

English Language Arts

- The child practiced language skills by communicating with the "customer" and asking them how they wanted their hair done.
- They used descriptive words to talk about different hairstyles and hair colors.
- The child may have created a story or role-played as a hairdresser, using their imagination and storytelling abilities.
- They may have read or looked at books related to hair or hairdressing, expanding their vocabulary and comprehension skills.

Physical Education

- The child developed fine motor skills by using scissors and combs to style the hair.
- They engaged in gross motor skills by standing or moving around while pretending to cut and style hair.
- They may have practiced hand-eye coordination while using tools like hair clips or hair ties.
- The child may have learned about body awareness and personal space as they maneuvered around the "customer" to style their hair.

Science

- The child may have learned about different hair types and textures, exploring the concepts of straight, curly, or wavy hair.
- They may have observed cause and effect, such as how cutting hair shorter results in a different appearance.
- The child may have experimented with different hair products or objects to style the hair, discovering the effects of these materials.
- They developed an understanding of hygiene and cleanliness by learning how to properly handle and sanitize hairdressing tools.

Social Studies

- The child may have learned about different cultures and traditions related to hairstyling, such as braiding or decorating hair for special occasions.
- They practiced social skills by interacting with the "customer," taking turns, and listening to their preferences.
- The child may have explored concepts of identity and self-expression through hairstyles, recognizing that hair can be a form of personal expression and cultural significance.
- They may have learned about different professions and roles in the community, understanding the job of a hairdresser and their importance in society.

Continuing the development related to this activity, encourage the child to explore different hair textures, styles, and colors through various materials such as yarn, fabric, or paper. They can create different hairstyles on dolls or make hair accessories using craft materials. Engaging in pretend play with friends or siblings as a hair salon can further nurture their imagination and social skills.

Book Recommendations

- The Hair Book by Graham Tether: A fun and colorful book that introduces different types of hair and hairstyles. It encourages self-acceptance and celebrates diversity.
- The Big Hair Book by Mary Reid: This book explores various hairstyles from different cultures and time periods, teaching children about the significance of hair in different societies.
- The Haircut by Theo Heras: A heartwarming story about a boy who overcomes his fear of getting a haircut and discovers the joy of self-expression through a new hairstyle.

If you click on these links and make a purchase, we may receive a small commission.