

- The child practiced their reading skills by reading aloud the book "Comet's Nine Lives" by Jan Brett.
- They improved their pronunciation and fluency by reading the text out loud.
- The child developed their comprehension skills by understanding the plot, characters, and events in the story.
- They learned new vocabulary words and their meanings from the book.
- The child enhanced their listening skills by hearing their own voice and paying attention to the words they were reading.
- They gained exposure to different writing styles and techniques used by the author.
- The child practiced their storytelling abilities by engaging with the narrative and conveying the events to the listener.
- They learned about the importance of punctuation and intonation in conveying meaning while reading aloud.
- The child developed their imagination and creativity by visualizing the story and its characters.

Continued development related to this activity can be encouraged through various creative ways. The child can explore other books by Jan Brett or similar authors to further enhance their reading skills and comprehension. They can also try writing their own short stories or retelling the events of "Comet's Nine Lives" from a different character's perspective. Engaging in book discussions with peers or participating in a book club can provide opportunities for deeper analysis and critical thinking. Additionally, incorporating drama or role-playing activities based on the book can help the child bring the story to life and develop their expressive language skills.