Art

- The child learned about color mixing and blending while using watercolor paints.
- They practiced different brush techniques to create textures and patterns in their artwork.
- They learned about composition and balance when planning their watercolor painting.
- They developed creativity and self-expression through their artwork.

For continued development, encourage the child to experiment with different painting surfaces such as textured paper or canvas. They can also explore different subjects to paint, such as landscapes, still life, or abstract art. Encouraging them to observe and paint from life can further develop their skills and creativity.
