

English Language Arts

- The child has learned about fables and the morals they teach through the story of Aesop's "Hercules and the Wagoner." They can identify the moral of the story and discuss its importance.
- They have developed language and vocabulary skills by engaging in discussions about the characters, events, and lessons in the story.
- The child has practiced reading comprehension by retelling the story in their own words and expressing their understanding of the plot, characters, and moral.
- By discussing the story, the child has enhanced their critical thinking and problem-solving skills as they analyze the characters' actions and the consequences of those actions.

To continue development, encourage the child to create their own simple fables, where they can invent characters and compose a story with a clear moral lesson. They can also act out the fable using puppets or role-playing to enhance their understanding and make the learning experience more interactive. Additionally, suggest finding other Aesop's fables to read and analyze, expanding their understanding of morals and story elements.
