

Did you know that baby goats can jump and climb just a little after they are born? This is because they are born with strong legs and a special kind of energy that helps them move quickly. When baby goats are born, they need to stay close to their moms and try to keep up, so being able to jump and climb helps them find food and stay safe from danger.

Imagine you are a baby goat. Right after being born, you feel strong and ready to explore! Baby goats, also called kids, use their strong legs to hop on rocks, little hills, or even climb onto their mom's back. This helps them learn about their new home and play with other goats.

Basically, baby goats are great jumpers and climbers because their bodies are ready for moving around very soon after birth. This helps them grow healthy and stay safe in the wild or on farms.
