

Hey there, little buddy! Have you ever heard of a game called Jenga? It's super fun and also a bit like a tricky puzzle. Let me tell you all about it!

Jenga is a game that you play with a tower of wooden blocks. Imagine a big stack of blocks, three blocks wide and many layers tall. The game starts with all the blocks neatly stacked in a tower. Your job is to take turns with your friends, carefully pulling out one block at a time and then placing it on top of the tower. Sounds easy, right? Well, here's the tricky part: you have to do it without making the tower fall down!

When it's your turn, gently pick a block from the tower. You can only use one hand, and you need to be super careful. You don't want the whole tower to come crashing down! Slowly wiggle the block out; if it feels loose, you can pull it out all the way. Then, put that block on top of the tower, making it even taller!

The game gets more and more exciting as the tower grows unstable. It gets wobbly with each block you take out and put on top. You and your friends will hold your breath with each move, wondering if this will be the block that makes the tower tumble! Everyone will be giggling and cheering you on.

If you're the one who pulls the block that makes the tower fall, don't worry! It's all part of the fun. You'll all laugh and quickly set up the tower to start another game. So, that's Jenga: a game of skill, patience, and a whole lot of fun.
