

What is a Badger Home?

A badger's home is called a sett. It's a cozy place underground where badgers sleep, stay safe, and take care of their babies.

How Do Badgers Build Their Homes?

Badgers dig big tunnels and rooms using their strong claws. These tunnels can be very long and have many entrances and exits. This helps badgers run away quickly if they are scared.

What Does a Badger Sett Look Like?

- Lots of tunnels going in different directions
- Rooms for sleeping and raising their babies
- Soft bedding made from grass or leaves inside the rooms

Where Do Badgers Live?

Badgers like to live in woods, fields, or places where there is soft soil to dig easily. Their setts can last for many years, and sometimes many badgers live together in the same home!

Why is the Badger's Home Important?

The sett keeps badgers warm and safe from other animals. It's like their special underground house where they can hide and rest.

So, to sum it up: Badger homes are underground tunnels called setts. Badgers are great diggers and make nice, safe places to live with their families!
