

Okay, little buddy! So, in chapters 9 and 10 of 'How to Train Your Dragon', we get to see some really cool stuff about dragons and what happens when they are given commands. Imagine having a pet dragon, right? But it's not just any dragon; it's a special one that needs to learn things just like we do! The main character, Hiccup, has a dragon named Toothless. When Hiccup gives Toothless a basic command, like to sit or stay, he's looking for Toothless to understand and follow directions.

Now, what was this basic command that Hiccup might give Toothless? Well, toothless might be told to do something really simple, like to come here or to listen. When a dragon hears these commands, it's a little like when you hear your mom call you for dinner. You know you need to respond! So, the expectation is that Toothless will pay attention and do exactly what Hiccup says. Just like you might want to listen to your teacher if they ask you to raise your hand in class!

But, here's the super exciting part! Training a dragon isn't always as easy as it sounds. Toothless is a bit stubborn, kind of like a cat who doesn't want to move from the sunny spot on the floor. So when Hiccup gives the command, sometimes Toothless might just stare at him like, "Yeah, right!" That's why Hiccup has to be clever and figure out ways that make Toothless want to listen, like offering him a treat or showing him that doing what Hiccup says is cool and fun!

Hiccup learns that being a trainer isn't just about shouting orders. It's about building friendship and showing trust. The better the bond between Hiccup and Toothless, the easier it is for Toothless to understand what is being asked of him. And when Toothless finally listens, it's like the best surprise ever! Hiccup feels all proud, and Toothless gets happy too, because they understand each other better!

So, in summary, when Hiccup issues those simple commands in chapters 9 and 10, he hopes that Toothless will listen and do what he's told. But it takes patience, friendship, and some fun tricks to make sure Toothless is ready to follow along. It's a great way to learn that being together and having fun can help us understand each other, whether it's with our friends, our pets, or even a dragon!
