

What is a Train Driver?

A train driver is a person who drives a train! Just like a car needs a driver to take people where they want to go, a train needs a driver too!

What Does a Train Driver Do?

Here are some important things a train driver does:

- Driving the Train: The train driver is in the front of the train and uses special controls to make the train go faster or slower.
- Following Signals: Train drivers must pay attention to signals, like colorful lights, that show them when to stop or go, just like traffic lights for cars.
- Safety First: They make sure that everyone on the train is safe. This means they watch for anything on the tracks that shouldn't be there.
- Communication: They talk to other workers using radios to make sure everything is okay on the train and the tracks.

Quick Facts!

- Train drivers usually wear a special uniform.
- They need to be careful and focused while driving.
- Being a train driver is a very important job because trains help people travel and move goods.

So next time you see a train, remember that there is a train driver helping to steer it safely!