

Just Like Cars, Trains Need a Driver!

Hey there! Did you know that just like how cars need drivers to take them where they need to go, trains need drivers too? These drivers are really important because they help the train start moving and keep it on the right track.

When a train driver gets in the train, they have some big responsibilities. First, they have to start the train. Just like you need to turn the key to start your parent's car, the train driver pushes buttons and pulls levers to get the train moving.

Next, the train driver has to follow rules. Every train has special rules they have to follow, just like how cars have stop signs and traffic lights. Train drivers look at signals, which are like big lights that tell them if it's safe to go or if they need to stop. These rules help keep everyone safe and make sure the train goes where it's supposed to.

So you see, train drivers are super important, just like car drivers. They start the train and follow rules to help everyone get where they need to go safely!
