

Imagine you have a magic box that makes sounds, and every time you open it, it plays a different kind of music. This music can make you feel happy, sad, excited, or even calm, just like when you watch a cartoon or read a story.

Classical music is like that magic box. It is made of different notes (like little voices) that come together to tell a story. Sometimes the music can sound like a happy dance party, and you can imagine people twirling around. Other times, it might sound slow and soft, like a gentle rain falling, making you feel sleepy or peaceful.

When you listen to classical music, if you close your eyes and use your imagination, you can picture things happening, like a brave knight going on an adventure or birds flying in a blue sky. The music helps you feel those stories inside your heart.

So, when someone says that classical music tells tales and conveys feelings, they mean that the music can help you imagine stories and feel emotions, even if it doesn't have any words!
