

A woodpecker is a special kind of bird that loves to peck on trees! Imagine a bird with a really hard beak that helps it tap on the wood. When woodpeckers peck, they are like little doctors for the trees. They help find bugs hiding inside the tree bark that can make the tree sick.

Think of it like this: If a tree has bad bugs, it's like having a tummy ache! The woodpecker pecks and makes little holes to get the bugs out. This helps the tree to stay healthy and feel better, just like we feel better when we go to the doctor if we are sick! So, that's why some people call woodpeckers 'tree doctors' because they help keep the trees in our parks and forests strong and happy!
