

Okay, imagine your favorite toy train. When you play with it, you might push it around to make it go where you want, right? Now, think about real trains. Just like your toy train, real trains also need someone to help them move! That person is called a driver or conductor.

The driver is very important because they make sure the train follows a special path called a route. This route tells the train where to go, just like a map shows you how to get to a park or a friend's house.

So, whenever the train needs to start, stop, or turn around, the driver is there to help it do all those things safely and correctly!
