

Imagine you have a really important letter that needs to be delivered quickly, like a birthday invitation for your best friend's party. When someone says, 'I am hurrying to deliver this urgent letter on time,' it means they are racing to make sure the letter reaches its destination before it's too late.

Sometimes, letters are super important because they could have important news, like when someone is waiting for good news about a new puppy or a fun trip. So, hurrying means they're trying to get the letter there fast, like running to the mailbox before it closes!

In short, the person is trying their best to make sure that the letter gets there quickly so that whoever is waiting can read it as soon as possible!
