

Inside a Groundhog Burrow

Imagine you're a little groundhog! Groundhogs are furry animals that dig deep homes in the ground called burrows. Let's explore what a groundhog family looks like when they're sleeping in their cozy burrow.

What is a Burrow?

A burrow is like a little underground house. Groundhogs like to dig tunnels where they can stay safe from predators. They dig their burrows with strong claws and can make them very deep!

A Family of Groundhogs

In a burrow, usually, there is a family of groundhogs. This family might include a mama groundhog, a papa groundhog, and their little baby groundhogs called pups. They all like to sleep together to keep warm and feel safe.

A Cozy Mat of Dry Grass

Inside the burrow, the groundhogs make a soft bed with dry grass. They find this grass outside in the fields or gardens. The dry grass is comfy, just like a blanket, and it helps keep them warm while they sleep.

Sleeping Happily

Picturing the groundhog family, you can imagine them all snuggled together on their mat of dry grass. They might be dreaming about eating tasty veggies and running in a sunny field. Groundhogs are mainly active during the day, but they also sleep a lot!

Conclusion

So, now you know a little bit about the cozy home of a groundhog family! They dig burrows, sleep on dry grass, and love being with each other. It's a happy little underground world!
