

A quill is a writing tool that was commonly used a long time ago, especially during the time of knights and kings. It is made from the feather of a bird, usually a goose or a swan. Here's a simple breakdown of what a quill is and how it was used:

1. Material: Quills are made from bird feathers. The part of the feather that is used is called the "shaft," which is the long, hard part of the feather.
2. Preparing the Quill: To use a quill for writing, the tip of the shaft is cut at an angle to create a pointed end. This point is dipped in ink for writing.
3. How it Works: When you dip the tip of the quill in ink and press it down on paper, it allows the ink to flow out and leaves a mark, creating letters and words.
4. Why Use Quills? Before pens were invented, people used quills because they were a natural and easily available tool to write with. They were often used for important documents and letters.
5. Today: Nowadays, we have modern pens and pencils, but some artists and writers still like to use quills for their unique look and feel.

In summary, a quill is a special kind of writing instrument that connects us to history and the way people used to write many years ago!
