

Objective

By the end of this lesson, the student will have a deeper understanding of the history of Point Nepean, including the significance of cadet training buildings and other historic structures in the area. The student will also develop skills in research, critical thinking, and creative expression through various activities.

Materials and Prep

- Notebook and pen
- Access to the internet (for research purposes)
- Art supplies (colored pencils, markers, paper)
- Printed maps of Point Nepean (if available)
- Access to local history books or resources (if available)

Before the lesson, familiarize yourself with the history of Point Nepean, including key dates, events, and notable buildings. It would be helpful to have a list of questions prepared to guide the student's research.

Activities

- Research Project: The student will research the history of Point Nepean, focusing on the cadet training buildings and other historic structures. They will create a timeline of significant events and buildings.

This activity encourages the student to delve into the history of the area, identifying key historical moments and understanding their significance.

- Artistic Representation: After researching, the student will create a drawing or model of one of the historic buildings at Point Nepean. They can choose to depict it as it is today or as it might have looked in the past.

This creative activity allows the student to express their understanding of the architecture and design of the buildings while reinforcing their historical knowledge.

- Presentation: The student will prepare a short presentation on their findings about a specific building or event related to Point Nepean. They can share their timeline and artistic representation with family members.
