

Justice Is Coming: Analyzing Activism, Media, and Change

Welcome! Today, we're diving into Cenk Uygur's 'Justice Is Coming'. This book offers a passionate perspective on modern politics and calls for significant change. We'll explore its arguments, connect them to history, and analyze how media shapes our understanding of justice.

Part 1: First Impressions & The Author's Voice (English/Media Literacy)

Before we dig deep, let's consider the source. Cenk Uygur is known for 'The Young Turks', a progressive news commentary show.

- Read the Introduction and Chapter 1 of 'Justice Is Coming'.
- Activity: As you read, identify 3-5 key arguments Cenk Uygur makes. What rhetorical devices (e.g., appeals to emotion, logic, statistics, anecdotes) does he use to support them? Note down examples.
- Discussion Point: How does Uygur's background as a commentator potentially influence his writing style and perspective? Is the language primarily objective or subjective? How can you tell?

Part 2: Historical Echoes (History/Social Studies)

Many of the issues Uygur discusses (e.g., economic inequality, political corruption, social justice) have deep historical roots.

- Activity: Choose one major theme from your initial reading (like campaign finance, corporate power, or a specific social justice issue). Research a historical parallel or precursor in American history (e.g., the Progressive Era trust-busting, the Civil Rights Movement, earlier campaign finance reform efforts).
- Task: Write a short comparison (2 paragraphs): How were the issues/struggles similar or different back then compared to how Uygur presents them now? What strategies did activists use in the past?

Part 3: Defining Justice & The Role of Activism (Social Studies/Civics)

The title itself, 'Justice Is Coming', is a bold claim. What does 'justice' mean in this context?

- Continue reading sections of the book focusing on proposed solutions or calls to action.
- Activity: Define 'justice' in your own words. Then, identify how Cenk Uygur seems to define it based on his writing. Are there differences?
- Research & Reflect: Find one other activist or political group (contemporary or historical) working on a similar issue mentioned by Uygur. What are their proposed solutions or methods? How do they compare to Uygur's approach?
- Debate Prep: Imagine you had to debate one specific point or proposal from the book. Outline the main arguments for and against it, considering different viewpoints (e.g., conservative, liberal, libertarian, socialist).

Part 4: Synthesis & Your Voice (English/Creative)

Now it's time to bring it all together.

- Option A: Persuasive Essay: Write an essay responding to a central argument in 'Justice Is Coming'. Do you agree or disagree? Support your position using evidence from the book, your historical research, and your analysis of justice.
- Option B: Multimedia Presentation: Create a short presentation (like Google Slides or a video) analyzing how media (like TYT or others) covers one of the justice issues discussed in the book. Discuss bias, framing, and impact.
- Option C: 'Justice' Action Plan: Based on the issues raised, develop a mini-action plan for promoting a specific type of justice (local or national). What steps could an individual or small group take?

Conclusion:

Reflect on what you've learned. Has reading 'Justice Is Coming' changed your perspective on politics, media, or activism? What questions do you still have? Discussing controversial and passionate ideas helps us clarify our own values and understand the complex world around us.
