The Clever Fox

A clever fox once lived in a forest filled with tall trees and winding streams. One sunny afternoon, while wandering through the woods, the fox stumbled upon a group of crows perched in a tree. The crows were known for their love of shiny objects and treasures they found.

The fox, being very hungry, wanted to eat one of the crows. But he knew he could not climb the tree to catch them. So, he thought of a clever plan. He approached the tree and called out to the crows in a loud voice, "Why are you making such ugly noises? You call that singing? I have heard the most beautiful singing in the forest, and it doesn't sound anything like what you're doing."

The crows, feeling proud and curious, asked the fox, "What does this beautiful singing sound like?" The fox replied, "It is something you cannot understand unless you see it with your own eyes. Come down, and I will show you the most magnificent singer in the forest."

The crows, eager to see this wonderful singer, flew down one by one. As they did, the fox quickly grabbed them and ate them up. And so, the clever fox enjoyed his delicious meal thanks to his cunning trick.
